Red Clay's Vision for Inclusive Schools

Communications & Trainings to Date

SUMMARY

Since the 2011–12 school year, Red Clay has invested three solid years of planning and preparing for a districtwide shift toward more inclusive education. Inside is a look at how we've reached out to every level of the Red Clay community—including numerous communications to families, employees, and the general public, significant professional development for educators, and an ongoing series of strategic planning sessions with key stakeholder groups.

Communications & Trainings to Date

In July 2012, Red Clay committed to a long-range plan for improving outcomes for all students by 2016. We defined a shared vision for inclusive education, founded on the core belief that all schools should have the capacity to deliver a full continuum of services to students with disabilities and English language learners, and all students should have the option to attend schools close to home, in inclusive classrooms with students from their own neighborhoods.

This report provides a summary of our efforts to prepare the Red Clay community for the shift to inclusion and to engage our stakeholders at every stage of the planning process. Detailed are three years' worth of communications, presentations and trainings delivered to key audiences across the district, including parents and students, teachers and administrators, school board members and the general public.

Note: Many of our schools have planned and delivered communications and trainings on their own throughout this process, some of which may not be reflected in this districtwide summary.
