This year, business organizations will have the opportunity to share career information about the current and future job market, needs of employers and work skills needed for future jobs with families from six different high schools. Information about internships, apprenticeships and job training that provide work skills for future employment will be provided. In addition, attendees can find out about skills employers will look for, necessary high school preparation and the needs employers will have. “Families will learn about the best ways to get into a profession,” said Chad Carmack, Red Clay administrator and coordinator of the College and Career Fair. This year’s highlights include business volunteers from the health, construction, finance, law enforcement business, entertainment and education fields.

Students and their families will be able to talk with representatives from all Delaware public colleges and universities as well as many colleges and universities from neighboring states. Over 50 college admission counselors will be available to answer questions and give presentations on financial aid, scholarships, the College Board, and the college application process.

Red Clay will offer free bus transportation from Wilmington to and from the College and Career Fair.
